Watercolor paper likes to curl up and contort when it's introduced to water. Using painters tape or masking tape usually works well. Make sure to leave it taped down until all the paint is completely dry. Flat paintings are much easier to frame and look more professional than a painting that is buckled from the water.

With the Sax flat brush, wet the first rectangle on the watercolor paper with clean water (but not so much that puddles start to form). Then, mixing a moderate amount of water into your paint, drop different blue paints (Ultramarine, Prussian, Cerulean Blue, and Turquoise) using the wet brush onto the wet surface.
